Dear Valued Customer:

In response to the recent outbreak of the Coronavirus COVID-19 and its potential for disruption to commercial and supply chain activities, we would like to provide an update to the current situation as it relates to Freeman and our customers and share some initiatives that we are taking to help mitigate the overall impact to our businesses.

While it is impossible to determine the long-term impact of an extended health event on our supply chain, please be advised that we are currently experiencing minimal shipping, supply, and vendor delays. Additionally, we are bolstering inventory levels to minimize the potential for future stock outages that could impact our customers. Freeman is closely monitoring the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) and the World Health Organization (WHO) websites for any changes, warnings, and/or recommendations for preemptive measures that can be taken to mitigate the overall risk to our operations.

In addition to increasing inventory, Freeman is ensuring that its employees are following strict hygiene standards and maintaining sanitary workspaces. These efforts are being taken at all levels of the company to ensure personal health, prevent lost time, and to ensure proper handling of materials that will ultimately be in the hands of our customers. The safety of our customers is a priority.

For more information regarding Coronavirus COVID-19, please see this article posted by the World Health Organization, as well as the dedicated webpage posted by the CDC.
